Not illustrated. 1870 Excerpt: .to say that I have always been below the truth, especially in the matter of manufacture, where the figure at which I have arrived is really 10 per cent below the real average. Observe then, gentlemen, that since the commencement of this inquiry, no one has produced a single document upon which he can rely to contradict our statements, and to contest the tariff which we propose you should adopt, the elements and figures of which can be appreciated mathematically. For, it should not V i be forgotten, that we have brought into account only those points which it was possible to calculate exactly. We have left it to you, gentlemen, to appraise the proportions in which it may be necessary to increase these tariffs, to make up for the elements which it is impossible to estimate with mathematical accuracy, and which we therefore leave you to settle. For these valuations, however, the English depositions ought to be of great service. Amongst the matters which we ask you to take into consideration, the taxes take a large and important place. On this point the English witnesses have forgotten, in crossing the channel, what they annually pay to the Treasury, and you can look at our English inventories to discover that the charges of all kinds are on their side about one-half the amount which we have to pay. Wishing to point out how unfavourable the conscription is to our trade. M. Jules Brame asked the witnesses...
