CHAPTER II TIM I remember first seeing Tim, a boy ten years of age, just ready to shed his knee pants, a beautiful boy to look at, and with a spring in his movement that so attracted my attention that I turned around to give him a second glance. He was in the seventh grade, and from almost the first day manifested an jinruly disposition. His idea seemed to be that no one should control him. He had been elsewhere to school, and was familiar with most of the mean little ways of annoying a teacher and disturbing the school. He began by telling the boys that his teacher did not dare to whip him; that she would better not touch. him, and continued in this way until it became evident that unless he showed a different spirit he could not long be tolerated in the...
