Excerpt: .Benton Falls at one time an ice gorge existed occasioning a rise of water so high as to overflow the electric road and intervals. This class of evidence, if submitted to the jury, should not have the effect in the mind of the court, if it did in that of the jury, of overcoming the testimony of numerous witnesses who lived in the vicinity of, and many in close proximity to, the bridge that was carried away, the exact point of inquiry, whose evidence certainly tends to show that the freshet at this point, taken in connection with the floating mass of ice was under the rule of law already laid down in 99 Maine, unprecedented, and of such a character that the defendant should not be legally held to have anticipated its occurrence. It is not our purpose to review all this testimony. It is from the plaintiffs own witnesses, and we think a fair conclusion from the summary of all of it brings the decision of this case within the rule above stated. The defendant is certainly entitled to have its rights tested upon inferences drawn from the plaintiffs witnesses, who had the best opportunity to know and the intelligence to comprehend the situation and conditions surrounding the negligence with which it is charged. We have read the testimony of all the witnesses and we find that Thomas F. French is a good representative of this class. He was a resident of Palmyra...
